Forecast For Northeast England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1600 on Thursday 28 Jan 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 1800 and 0600

Headline:
Rain overnight. Damp Friday, colder with some snow possible later.

This Evening and Tonight:
Briefly drier at first, ahead of rain spreading northeast, with some heavier bursts likely. This too should become lighter and more intermittent later in the night, perhaps becoming confined to the north, with frost and ice possible in southern parts. Minimum temperature -1 deg C (30 deg F).

Friday:
Rather cold and damp, with extensive low cloud. The onshore breeze should bring occasional light rain and drizzle, giving way to some snow, mainly on hills, into a colder evening. Maximum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
A bright but cold few days, with some sunny spells but also isolated wintry showers. Overnight frosts and freezing fog patches are likely as winds periodically fall light.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.